Community hubs build social cohesion in Australia. They are welcoming places where families from all backgrounds, particularly mothers with preschool children, come to connect, share and learn. The National Community Hubs Program model is a proven place-based and people-centred way of building connections, providing a safe space, being accepted, sharing and learning together and building a network of support. Hubs are embedded in primary schools and help bridge the gap between families and the wider community. They connect families with each other, with their school, and with local services and support.
